

From Truck Driver to Webmaster, Tyrus Smith Lands Dream Job

6/3/2008 10:52:14 AM

Tyrus Smith started as a truck driver with Bizzuka client Halo Supply, but that's not where he ended up.

Within a few months Tyrus went from making deliveries to managing Halo's Web site. In fact, he does quite a bit more than that, including producing the company newsletter, writing bids and proposals, project management, marketing and business development.

"I started with Halo as a truck driver last November and did that job for about three months," says Tyrus. "During that time I had the opportunity to repair computers on what's known as a 'test bed'. When the owner of the company realized I knew about computers, my truck driving days were over."

Tyrus' knowledge of computers came both from computer programming classes taken at a local university and from a lifetime of learning on his own. "I had been making Web sites since the 5th grade and loved to do design," he says.

While he doesn't besmirch his days as a truck driver, Tyrus likes this much better. "I get to do what I love and get paid for it at the same time," he said. "As long as I come up with creative ideas I have free rein to do pretty much whatever I want."

Tyrus, it sounds like you've landed your dream job for sure!
